Passenger Shippers are Warned.
Through the Supervising Inspector of Steam Hauls and Boilers at San Francisco, United States Inspectors Edwards and Fuller have received a circular from Secretary Redfield, of the department of commerce, in which he warns masters of passenger vessels not to navigate under a full head of steam during a fog. He strongly intimates that masters indulging in such practice will have their licenses suspended for the remainder of the season. In part he says, relative to an accident on the Hudson river:
"Referring to the case of the grounding of the passenger steamer Iriquois it appears that the master, Charles H. Hallenbeck, allowed his vessel to run down the river at unusual speed at night in a thick fog. Presumably there were passengers on board. It seemed to be rather by good fortune than by management that nothing more serious happened than the grounding of the vessel and the damaging of a dock. A collision might well have resulted with loss of life. It is not the captain's fault, apparently, that such a thing did not happen."

Dr. Naegell, professor of medicine at Liege University, recommends the practice of yawning. A good yawn the Belgian scientist asserts, is good for the lungs.

Playing on a violin which he had not touched for thirty years, Harry Fields, 86 years old, took first honors at a fiddling match conducted at his birthday party at Washington, Pa. Six octogenarians were his competitors. Kubelick prophesied a great future as a violinist for his infant son.

LARGEST LOCK IN HAWAII WAS OFF

THE WORLD AT BREMEN

BREMEN—The new docks being constructed at the northern extremity of the port of Bremen on the ground allotted by Prussia for the purpose, are rapidly approaching completion and the municipality will shortly vote the balance due for this great undertaking. Including this latter sum the entire cost will amount to about $6,500,000 marks.

The estimated expenditure has been greatly increased by the fact that allowance has had to be made for the increasing size of the steamers to be berthed. For example, the depth of the entire channel, which at present amounts to 11.30 meters in Bremerhaven has had to be increased to 13.30 meters. Furthermore, the length of the entrance lock has had to be increased to the gigantic figure of 350 meters, at the present moment, there is no other lock in the world of such enormous size. In the Panama canal, the maximum length of the lock is 295 meters, and it is already surpassed by a lock in the Kaiser Wilhelm canal having a length of 380 meters.

The lock at Bremerhaven will also surpass all existing ones in breadth; the actual figure being 60 meters, whereas in the Panama canal the lock has only a maximum width of 33 1/2 meters and those of the Kaiser Wilhelm canal and at Amsterdam do not exceed 45 meters in breadth.

The actual greatest draft of any steamer afloat only amounts to 11.2 meters, but it is not at all impossible that future constructions will exceed this figure, although at present there exist very few docks having a depth of more than 13 meters.

Miss Viola Miller, policewoman in Ottawa, Ill., has the distinction of reforming that town in one month.

HAWAII BEFORE DISASTER

It is now believed that the little dark painted bark seen hovering off the lee coast of the island of Hawaii a number of months ago, which later displayed signals indicating that it was the whaling vessel Gayhead, soon became a total wreck after leaving the Hawaiian group behind.

Today there has been received news that bears out the contention that the Gayhead has met with a successful whaling expedition in the South Pacific waters and while sighted by the masters and mates of several inter-island steamers, was bearing a rich cargo to the North Pacific.

With the arrival of the Japanese steamer Nippon Maru from San Francisco it was learned that after braving Arctic gales for a quarter of a century and having figured in many long voyages out of the Golden Gate, the well-known whaling bark "Gayhead" is a total wreck on the coast of southwest Alaska. Captain George W. Porter and his crew of thirty-one men were saved and will be brought home on a government steamer. News of the disaster was received by wireless from the station at Chignik Bay. Although no details of the disaster were given, it is believed that the windjammer drove ashore in a gale, piling up on the rocks that mark the shores of the harbor. Captain Porter and his men landed safely and made their way to the cannery station at Chignik, from where they sent word of the destruction of the old whaler. The "Gayhead" sailed from San Francisco on October 6th of last year, shaping a course for the southern coast where sperm whaling was engaged in. She was probably heading for the Arctic, where the right whales abound, when disaster overtook her. According to L. E. James, managing owner of the whaler, the vessel was valued at $15,000. She carried some insurance. In addition to Captain Porter who is a veteran whaling master, the "Gayhead's" officers included Henry J. Gonsalves, first mate; Henry K. Kruze, second mate; Antonio Nicotian, third mate; John Erick, fourth mate; and Boatsteersman Manuel Pera, Ben Lopes, John Domingo, and Frank Pheila. The "Gayhead" was a vessel of 265 gross tons, 110 feet long, 26 feet beam, with a depth of 15 feet. She was built at Mattapoisett in 1877.

Tramp Steamers in Majority.
According to the most recent reports of Lloyd's Register of shipping, the overseas commerce of the world is conducted by over 25,000 steamers, having a gross tonnage of 43,954,000 tons, which are owned by approximately 4,200 different firms and companies. Of this great body of tonnage, only about 1,555 steamers, owned by approximately 108 different companies, are engaged in regular line service in the overseas trades. The remainder constitutes the great mass of free tramp tonnage, operating entirely under the law of supply and demand, and regulating the ocean freight rates for everybody by the charges which they fix for transportation of the great mass of the world's staple products.

New Canal Steamer Line.
A passenger and freight service between New York and San Francisco through the Panama Canal will be established early in 1915 by the International Mercantile Marine Company; it was announced by the company recently.

The steamships Finland and Kroonland, 22,000 tons each, American built and flying the American flag now of the Red Star line, will be put on the new Panama Pacific line.

Sailings once in three weeks are contemplated, and the journey will be made in sixteen days, with a call en route at San Diego or Los Angeles.

One gets in the "Old Dog Tray" class here, with lawful approval.
